Party begins, and all join in

As the fourth Youth NABC kicked off on Thursday, the Sheraton Centre Hotel was charged with the energy of more than 100 young bridge enthusiasts who couldn't wait to sit down to play – or jump up, run around and make noise.

The tournament continues today with one of two main events – the Baron Barclay National Youth Open Pairs. Compared to the warm-up Card Rook Pairs, the Open Pairs is more "serious," although that term probably does not apply to a group whose truly serious goal is having fun.

Nevertheless, each member of the winning pair in the Open will receive a $1000 scholarship from Baron Barclay Bridge Supply, the world's largest seller of bridge books and other bridge equipment.

Last year's Open Pairs winners – Andrew and Richard Jeng of Johns Creek GA – are back to try for two in a row.

Most of the young players were accompanied by parents who have discovered that bridge is an ideal activity for their children.

Natalie Gallimore of Ottawa made the five-hour drive from home with her three children – Rhyanna, Rhys and Pierce Melanson, 13, 11 and 9 years old, respectively. All three, Gallimore said, learned bridge in school, where the game is a regular part of the curriculum.

Rhyanna and Rhys won a tournament after taking up bridge when the school's chess club was discontinued. The Youth NABC has been great for the youngsters, Gallimore said. "We really like it. It's now just a matter of planning the summer vacations around it."

Carol Bongard, president of Unit 166, is Co-Chair with Dana Norton of the Youth NABC.

Bongard teaches bridge in schools in the Toronto area – grades two through six. "I'll teach anybody who comes in. The kids love it, and they are just like sponges. Anything you tell them they soak right up."

Norton said she was encouraged by the first-day turnout – and she is expecting lots more for the national events today and tomorrow (Aileen Osofsky National Swiss Teams).

"I thought it went quite well," Norton said. "All the kids enjoyed themselves, and that's what we want."

Marilyn MacDiarmid of Moncton NB traveled

Tops in the Youth Teams were David Yoon, Sarah Chen, Linda Cai and Edward (SM) Li.

While the Youth Open Pairs was in progress, younger players were competing in the Card Rook Pairs.

Australian observer's take: ACBL leads youth move

Peter Gill, an Australian expert and tournament veteran, has been observing efforts to recruit young players to the game of bridge for 44 years. He has done a lot of such work himself.

In his view, what's going on in North America is miles ahead of efforts anywhere else in the world.

"It's fantastic," he said. "This is like the pinnacle."

Gill said he dropped in on his first Youth NABC in Washington DC two years ago. "I was really impressed with Richard and Andrew Jeng." He was referring to the young Georgians who are defending champions in the Baron Barclay National Youth Open Pairs. Richard became ACBL's youngest Life Master a couple of years ago.

Gill's view is that great strides have been made in youth recruitment in just a few years. "America has gone from the place that didn't do much to doing really well."

He said he particularly likes the way young people are taught to play, and he referred to comments about the importance of partnership trust from the Jeng brothers after they won the 0-1500 Life Master Pairs earlier in the tournament.

He also praised Atlanta Junior Bridge, the brainchild of Patty Tucker. She organized and brought off the first Youth NABC in her back yard in 2008.

"What's going on in Atlanta is way ahead," Gill said. "Some much thought and planning has gone into the novel ideas that work."

Gill has seen many efforts to recruit young players, "and if you do it right, there's a huge interest."

The ACBL, he says, is doing things right these days. "American bridge," he said, "has a great future."
